Continuous Medical Education (CME) on ICU Acquired Infections

Saturday, November 21, 2009

CME Organized by

Dept. of Critical Care Medicine
 Sanjay Gandhi Postgraduate Institute of Medical Sciences, Lucknow, India

Invitation

Dear friends and colleagues,

It gives me great pleasure in inviting you for the CME on ICU Acquired infections being organized by Department of Critical Care Medicine at SGPGIMS, Lucknow, U.P.

Patients admitted to Intensive Care Units (ICUs) are at great risk of acquiring nosocomial infections. They are susceptible to infections because of their underlying diseases or conditions associated with impaired immunity. Moreover, ICU-acquired infections are associated with high mortality, increased length of ICUs and hospital stay and high hospital costs.

The educational activity during the CME will provide in-depth discussion on the different aspects of this problem by renowned multidisciplinary experts having vast experience in this field. The deliberations are expected to provide insight to improve management of ICU in our day to day practice of intensive care. Besides basic concepts and current practices newer perspectives would also be presented which would prove useful to residents and critical care practitioners. This programme is likely to be of interest to colleagues from critical care, microbiology, anesthesiology, surgery and internal medicine.

We welcome you all to the city of Lucknow which bears imprints of history and modern lifestyle.

Looking forward to welcoming you in November 2009.

Sincerely,

Dr. Afzal Azim
Organising Secretary
